Woven label, that is, woven trademark label. Also commonly known as "weaving Mark". It is widely used in clothing, shoes and hats, home textiles, handicrafts and other fields.

Because it can be woven with various yarn raw materials, it has different characteristics in terms of washability and temperature resistance. Most of the brand labels on the clothes we wear every day are made of 100% polyester, which are bright in color, washable and colorfast below 160 degrees.

Trimming Woven Clothing Label: the label is like a cloth structure, which is simply interwoven up and down through a warp and a weft. It is called a simple plane label. Generally speaking, warp yarns are fixed, either black or white, so they can be divided into black flat and white flat. For light color background, white flat is generally used, and for dark color, black flat is generally used. The pattern and color of cloth label are mainly expressed by weft, and the color expressed will be different from that of warp crossing. Since most machines are limited to the types of weft yarns, the colors they can express are limited, generally less than 8 kinds. It can be seen from the above that the price components include: the width of the cloth label, that is, the amount of warp used; The length of the label and the length of each color along the meridional direction. In order to express the details and colors more richly, the weft is doubled, which is called double-sided mark. If a certain color needs to be more three-dimensional, add a heavy yarn, which is called heavy shuttle. In addition to washing and sizing, flat double-sided labels are mostly used. Cloth labels are all made of yarn to express patterns, which must
